

Gain valuable work experience

related to your career while strengthening connections and opportunities in a rural North Carolina community!

Internship Components

Eligible Experiences - The internship opportunity identified by a Golden LEAF Scholar must be aligned with the student's course of study. Course of study is defined as a declared major or intended major for first-year students that have not yet declared a major. For students without a declared major, additional information regarding courses taken or registered to take may be requested to confirm course of study.

Eligible Sites - Internship sites include, but are not limited to, businesses, non-profits, governmental entities, and/or companies. Internships must be completed in person at a site physically located in a qualifying rural county (see link to qualifying counties). Internships may be completed at an entity with multiple locations including with locations outside of the eligible counties, provided the student completes the internship at a site located in an eligible county.

Interns are responsible for: contacting their prospective internship site; discussing the internship opportunity with the site; working with the site to craft a job description for their internship; and providing the contact information for the internship site on their application.

While the Rural Internship Initiative aims to provide its participating scholars with valuable work experiences, there are guidelines for activities scholars may engage in within a healthcare setting. You can review a list of pre-approved healthcare intern positions.

Application Information

Applications must include an unofficial transcript (to verify course of study information), initial internship site information (site name, contact, and contact email), and a series of answers to short essay questions in which the intern describes how the proposed experience aligns with their course of study and supports their professional development.

"This opportunity has been great in preparing me for day-to-day nursing in a medical office environment. I have been able to gain industry knowledge firsthand through both observations and hands-on opportunities. The skills that I've gained will be useful for bedside or administrative nursing roles."

This transformation in my perception is one of the most valuable takeaways from my internship, and I am certain it will influence my approach and dedication as I move forward in my career in social work."
